Filmmakers share that unlike ground combat, air strikes are time-sensitive and don't get long build-ups. Scenes have to be intense and dramatic. (A still from the web show Ranveer: Balahot & Beyond)

'Vijeta was one of the Hindi films that got aerial combat right'

Niharika Lal

While Hindi films and web series may not always be praised for accurately portraying the Armed Forces, their powerful dialogues and memorable songs often linger in public memory.

Last week, as news of India's latest aerial response gripped the nation, retired General Yash Mor invoked Vijeta – a 1982 classic – as one of the few Hindi films that got air combat right. In a landscape where military dramas are increasingly popular, we asked defence insiders and filmmakers if Hindi cinema is finally getting war in the skies right – or still missing the mark?

'Vijeta's air base scenes were outstanding for a film in the 80s'

Major General (retd) Yash Mor points to Govind Nihalani's 1982 film Vijeta as one of the earliest and most realistic portrayals of the Air Force. "Vijeta was shot at the NDA. It captured a cadet's life with honesty, and the air base scenes were outstanding – especially for a film made in the '80s. They didn't have the kind of cameras or VFX we have now. It was one of the Hindi films that got aerial combat right." Made during the Indian Air Force's golden jubilee year, the film had support from the IAF. "It's as much about the cadet as it is about the nation," Mor says. He recalls how Kunal Kapoor's character climbs into a MiG-21 before a training sortie. "Those air combat scenes, the training montages, haven't been matched in recent films. I hold Vijeta in high regard because it had no VFX." The film never names Pakistan, but it's set during the 1971 war. Talking about Operation Sindoor, Mor adds, "Even with so much transparency now, the execution of Operation Sindoor was brilliant. I've been to many Air Force bases. Jab aircraft take off karta hai toh alog hi feeling aati hai. That intensity – we need to capture it on screen more often."

'RESEARCH AND MEETING STAKEHOLDERS WAS CRUCIAL'

Santosh Singh, director of Ranveer: Balakot & Beyond, says that they worked closely with experts to get the details right. "The aerial sequences had to be close to what actually happened. Some of the shots we filmed in Serbia. The rest was done with VFX," he says, adding, "We couldn't afford to go wrong. This was a real incident. Research, meeting stakeholders – all of that became crucial. Our consultant told us about all the Air Force commands, code words, operational procedures. We even showed the final cut to the Defence Ministry. They said we were 70-80% accurate." As aerial combat can be visually overwhelming, Singh says they used war room sequences to make the viewers understand. "We wanted people to understand the stakes, the decisions, and then experience the impact of the strikes," he adds.

'To depict an air strike accurately, you have to consult officers'

Samar Khan, who directed Avrodh (based on the Balakot air strikes) and the series Shoorveer, explains what goes into building realism. "To depict an air strike accurately, you have to consult officers. They can review the technical details – how strikes are designed, what a dogfight looks like, or how pilots communicate."

Filmmakers start with sketches and computer-generated models, and crucial details are cross-checked by defence consultants. But realism alone doesn't make it cinematic. "That's where craft comes in," he adds. "Sound design, score, the right camera angles, even dialogue help you build drama and tension. Air strikes are time-sensitive. You don't get long build-ups like in ground battles. Scenes have to be intense and dramatic."

You shoot takeoffs, landings, and even try to mount a camera on a pilot's helmet. Then comes the CGI – that's essential. Without VFX, it's nearly impossible to make the scenes believable

– Samar Khan, director of Avrodh

'Must make more realistic films on real operations'

Major Sandeep Sangwan (retd), a defence consultant for the 2023 film Pippa, says, "Uri showed foot soldiers going in, eliminating targets, and returning. But Balakot, and what happened last week, are both air strikes. That's a very different scale."

He says that most Indian films still depict aerial combat as dogfights – dramatic one-on-one engagements between fighter jets. "Fighter was a fictional story showing a dogfight. But a pinpoint air strike, where a target is identified, locked, and hit with precision – that's something we still haven't done enough in Indian cinema. But Hollywood has. Look at Mission: Impossible or any US war drama. We must make more realistic films on real operations."

Major General (retd) Yash Mor agrees, "We must
